New Orleans attorney Jim Cobb has written a behind-the-scenes trial book like no other. It is a passionate, profane and highly-readable account of the signature horror of Hurricane Katrina - the drowning deaths of 35 nursing home patients. When the book opens, it is two years after the storm and Cobb is in court, defending the Sal and Mabel Mangano, owners of St. Rita's Nursing Home, who've been charged criminally with the deaths. They face the prospect of spending their golden years behind bars. The families of the victims are out for blood; they arrive for the trial's last day all dressed in black. Cobb's law partners, who have been trying to resurrect their Katrina-flattened law practice while he represents the most-despised people in Louisiana, are barely speaking to him. Cobb himself is buried under a mountain of personal debt as he simultaneously struggled to rebuild his own flooded house and mount a defense he's not sure his clients can afford.Cobb's chief adversary is Louisiana's Attorney General, a politically ambitious first-termer facing reelection, Charles Foti. The AG served three decades as the criminal sheriff of Orleans Parish and was known more as an astute political operator than a student of the law. In the days after Katrina, Foti stoked public outrage against the Manganos with a media campaign that vilified the couple so thoroughly most Louisianans thought the Manganos deserved whatever charges the state could muster up. And the state mustered up a full slate: Each of the Manganos was charged with 35 counts of negligent homicide and 24 counts of cruelty to the elderly and infirm -- for a total of 118 counts.Cobb had never defended a criminal case before.

Not since the blinded Samson pulled down the Temple of Dagon on top of the drunken, rioting heathen Philistines has there been as great and unlikely a triumph of justice as attorney Jim Cobb's quest to vindicate his clients the Manganos in a Louisiana country courthouse against every kind of the worst possible odds. In the usual criminal trial, the defense has to beat only one opponent, the prosecution. Not this time. The Manganos were good people who had risked their own lives to try to save the 35 people they were charged with having murdered. Ranged against them besides the prosecuting Louisiana Attorney General were: the national news media, which had taken the Attorney General up on a mountain and shown him glory and possibly Wall Street by reporting false rumors that whipped him and the public into a frenzy to crucify the Manganos; the Governor of Louisiana, who tried to quash a subpoena for her to testify about what she had told Congress as to who was really guilty and why; paid "expert" witnesses for the prosecution; a real defense expert and another defense witness nevertheless both scared to testify; a bumbling trial judge who kept getting lost, to the prejudice of the defense; and an inept Louisiana Supreme Court that issued a misguided final writ decision that could put the Manganos behind bars for life because of just this one legal error the high Court had a chance to commit in the case.
