Customer Reviews

Are you good at math and geometry but have difficulty with words and graphic designs? Can you calculate the volume of objects, crack a code or even pick out why one object is different from others even if the difference is subtle. This puzzle book is not only a Mensa type challenge but also you can clearly see how your brain is wired and what your mental strengths and weaknesses might be. This version of the book is for E-reader devices and contains black and white images. Each puzzle is designed to load fast on E-readers and the graphics are sharp and simple and easy to interpret but sometimes not easy to solve. That's why it is a puzzle book. This book is a collection of a wonderful and challenging set of puzzles. They are visually and graphically well designed and thought-provoking. This book will provide you hours of enjoyment and offers you an interesting way to evaluate something in depth and think outside of the box. I own several of these books from the Grabarchuk family and I have loved them all. If you are looking for a color version for a higher end tablet then take a look at this book: 100 Puzzle Quizzes HD (Interactive Puzzlebook for Tablets) I enjoyed this book and I believe you will enjoy it too! I purchased this book on the day it was released and free to everybody.

This is the e-reader version of the Grabarchuk 100 Puzzle Quizzes. It is a fun and thought provoking book of puzzles that will entertain families for many hours. All 100 are original inventions. There are two versions of the puzzles. One is optimized for e-ink kindles. The other is for tablets. Both have the same contents. There is an elaborate introduction and an easy to understand instruction "How to Play the Games." The 100 puzzles are of all kinds and figures, logic, visual, counting, matchsticks, coins, and much more. The puzzles are easy to read and understand, and the solutions to them are easy to find. Each puzzle has from one to five stars indicating how difficult it is. One can go to the list of puzzles and choose which puzzle one wants to try. The following are some examples: The thirty seventh has three stars indicating that it is fairly hard. It shows a design made out of lines and asks which of four words could fit into the design? Number thirty eight shows a picture of steps running along the outside of a square and steps within the square and asks "what is the least number of steps needed to reach floor F?" The hundredth puzzle, like three others, has five stars. It shows two columns of three dice in each. It asks "which tower shows the larger sum of total outer surface?" See my review of the tablet version for other examples.

Tons of puzzles to make you think and wonder. Numbers that don't match, steps to a destination, hidden words, which items don't belong, and many more puzzles to make you sweat. I played with this game and lost track of time (more than once.) The puzzles are addicting and kept me coming back for more. My son enjoyed this puzzle book also. He beat me in finishing, his brain seems wired better than mine. I did find myself wishing that the puzzles came with better instructions on how to complete. I had to cheat a few times and see if I had the right answer until I got a better understanding of how that particular puzzle worked. As I played more, I realized that it was easier to figure out what the puzzle was asking. So the more I played the better I got. My only complaint is I found the 5 way button a bit difficult to use when answering. I would rather have typed the answer, of course that wouldn't work well for all the different kinds of Kindles out there. But if you like puzzles and brain teasers, you will love this item. I played it on my Kindle with keyboard. Color would add a bit of spice to the game if you have a Fire or other tablet.

The Grabarchuk Family Puzzlebook: 100 Puzzle Quizzes (in sparkling black and white and interactive!) should become essential workout material for all for those baby boomers who are approaching retirement AND all those beyond retirement age AND for young people excited about polishing their mental skills - a terrific pre-examination jog. What the Grabarchuk family has provided is a transportable gig full of visual aptitude/spatial relations/astute synapse connections tests that are both fun and challenging. Each of the 101 tests requires concentration, decision making skills, quality perception, and focused attention. What at first seems rather obvious to some gradually becomes a book load of brainteasers and testers that will, in the latter pages, challenge even the most practiced aficionado of mental games. What makes this series of brain checkers so 'enjoyable' is that they are all in color and demand an interactive approach: you know at the end of the test whether you arrived at the right answer or not. It may be simple to figure out how to use this interactive book, but the 'simplicity' ends there. These are tough tests and require mature concentration from the user. We are living in a time when people congregate at the gyms for workouts, tape cardiometers to the arms for walking/jogging/running/ and buy into nutritional programs and that is all a step in the right direction: these activities help fight the war on obesity that is threatening national health. But equally important is providing a workout for the brain - the only inexpensive tactics to fend off creeping senility and dare we say Alzheimer's disease? Perhaps the language is too strong and certainly the Grabarchuk Family does not purport such claims. But these games and puzzles are far more than entertaining: these 100 Puzzle Quizzes are Healthy! Grady Harp, November 12
